

Socials Conceptions on Sexuality in Palestinian Society

Abstract:

“This study constitutes a search for what the perceptions adopted by the Palestinian society about sex, through a combination of quantitative research and qualitative techniques through cohabitation and content analysis, interview and questionnaires. The goal, is to know the nature of the standard of the genus perceptions, and what is the source of these perceptions and how they are Astdechalha in the mentality of the individuals in the Palestinian society in the territories occupied in 1967 and therefore knowledge of acceptable and unacceptable about sex in Palestinian society, based on the assumptions that the social perceptions about sex in Palestinian society is gaining Hraeiadtha of Some religious texts and traditions, and therefore formed a community speech builds social perceptions of sexuality of female and male, and become the values of "shame" and "Grand" and "forbidden", set the perceptions of individuals in the Palestinian society for sexual pleasure, while the perceptions of individuals of acceptable and unacceptable socially about sex influenced by their level of economic and social but they are not affected by the level of education. The results showed that the social milieu, and income variables, the degree of influence in the industry perceptions of religion and reproduced socially. Perhaps the social milieu is a middle-income individuals who are most susceptible to overzealous customs and traditions regarding the perceptions about sex, but discipline will remain intact in the defect and Haram, confidentiality and virginity, and social imagination. As it appeared that the authority of customs and traditions are stronger than the power of religion in building perceptions and individuals they adjust to it”